Michelle Weaver 08

The endangered Sumatran tiger is the smallest of all tiger subspecies living exclusively in Sumatra Indonesia. Males measure about 7 feet from head to tail and weigh 300 pounds. Only approximately 400 live in game reserves and national parks and the rest are spread out in areas that are quickly being lost to agriculture. The reserves are not safe because, despite conservation efforts, many tigers are killed by illegal hunters each year.

Interesting Factoid: The Sumatran tiger has webbing between their toes which causes them to be fast swimmers.
